Summary

You find little Abigail in her dreams, curled around herself and trying to hide.

You find little Abigail in her dreams, curled around herself and trying to hide.

You shift, press your nose against her skin, her hair.

She stops crying and looks up at you – you notice that slowly, the dreamscape is getting brighter, less claustrophobic.

You paw at the ground and nose at her neck – she smells like sunshine and blood and despair.

Come with me, you send the thought to her, and then you turn, and walk away. She walks beside you, an arm around your neck and her fingers in your feathers.

You lead her to Will's house - to Will's mind.

We will take care of you, darling Abigail, you say, watching as dream-Will waves at the two of you while wrestling with the dogs. It will be perfect. You'll never have to run, never have to hide.

And Abigail just smiles and presses a kiss to your nose.

You shift and take her hand, press your own kiss to it, and then tug her towards Will.

End.
